

Re: Sinclair's pre-election plans to show a questionable documentary, "Stolen Honor", which, among other things, claims that Senator Kerry "held a secret meeting with the enemy" in Paris during the Vietnam War.

Media consolidation puts whimsical political influence in the hands of a few big wigs. If media companies were smaller, political views could be balanced out across the market. As it is, now that you've allowed greater ownership, a pre-election blitz like this could disinform the public quite effectively.

We need an injunction telling Sinclair to show both "Stolen Honor" and "Going Upriver."

Stop rubber stamping these huge conglomerates. It's easier for the public to judge what's truth when several small outlets agree than when one asserts and no other voices are heard.
